I discovered graphic design during my gap year after high school. I took time off from school due to hip surgeries, and during that year I began working at ThreatLocker as a marketing intern. Since I have been an artistic person my entire life, I gravitated toward graphic design. This has now grown into a passion and a career direction.

My favorite part of design is watching everything come together. I love creating a booth design and then seeing it at a real conference, or designing a billboard and later passing it along I-4. Even the smaller things, like pins or stickers, are awesome when I see people choose to put them on their bags or laptops. Seeing my work exist, be appreciated, and interact with people in the real world is incredibly rewarding and is what continues to motivate me.
